

Shwezin Win

Three words other people use to describe you:

Fun, Focused, Caring

Why the Power of the Parent mission aligns with you:

Being a parent and a step parent in the workplace, I understand the challenges. I see so many talented parents leaving organisations, struggling with the constant need to choose between personal or professional success. My passion is to champion working parents, helping to ensure it's not a choice and that parents can thrive on both fronts.

Outside of Power of the Parent we'll find you doing:

Singing in a choir, spending time with family and friends, painting, exercise. I'm also busy building my business (Win at life) coaching working parents, young adults and teens to develop that unshakable belief in themselves to succeed in life.

You can't go without:

Exercise

A failure you learnt from:

Trying to get ahead of myself for a presentation at work (to impress my boss), I decided to crack on with writing the deck. I worked all hours in advance of our meeting so I could show him how much effort I'd put in. At the meeting, after the first few minutes of the discussion, I realised I had misinterpreted the brief. My learning – don't let your need to impress override your basic skill to clarify the goal before setting off to deliver the work.

Your current definition of success:

Being authentic, happy, having fun and making a positive difference to others.

How you celebrate the good stuff:

We're always celebrating, no success is too small for a treat, mostly to something "bad" like the waffle and pancake shop or a night out to a fancy restaurant. I gave my eldest daughter a box of her favourite chocolates at the end of what was for her a very stressful week at school .

A cracking day in / out would include:

Wonderful company, lots of laughter – add in great food, some champagne and desserts/chocolates (I do have a very sweet tooth!) and I'm a happy bunny.
